was not the calmest and pleasantest that the colonel has put in since he left New York. The people of Farge were kind, but they had to fight the elements and they lost. It was under most trying circumstances that Mr. Roosevelt delivered a long address to the workingmen and labor unions of the West this afternoon. Talks Labor and Strikes.

Mr. Roosevelt assumed an attitude of balance throughout his address to-day that caught the crowd. He told his hearers that he believes in organized labor, but he said that his position is not unequivocal, and that he cannot indorse all practices that the unions adopt. "Strikes are sometimes necessary and proper," he exclaimed. "Sometimes they represent the only way in which, after all other methods have been exhausted, it is possible for the laboring man to stand for his

"When I was President I tried to carry myself so that there would not be any need of saying, 'Put the other party in to turn the rascals out,' he said. "There wasn't any need, because I turned them out myself. I'll cinch a dishonest man of either party," he shouted, "but I'll cinch a man of my own party just a little bit quicker."

It was raining hard as Mr. Roosevelt came to the closing remarks of his speech, He hurried. He paused long enough to say: "Let the editor of the paper financed by the big interests help in hounding the lishonest man out of big business." Speech Makes Impression.
